EDITOR'S LETTER

Women supporting women. Brown with her cat, Batty.

A few days after Kamala Harris accepted the Democratic vice-presidential nomination, I Zoomed with her niece, Meena Harris. Meena, a former lawyer who served as senior adviser on policy and communications for Harris's successful California Senate bid in 2016, now runs the Phenomenal Woman Action Campaign. The organization, which supports women's social issues, was named after Maya Angelou's poem "Phenomenal Woman," and it makes sense when you meet Meena. She is frank and funny, and when she's tired, as she is today, Meena is a liberal swearer. She is not remotely "messaged," which is the reason Phenomenal Woman has struck such a chord.

She also makes one hell of a sweatshirt. We were excited to collaborate with Phenomenal Woman on this delightfully subversive pink Ambitious sweat. I make a point of asking every woman I interview what she's ambitious for. "I was raised by ambitious women," Meena says. "I was taught that ambitious women get shit done, and they can do amazing things in the world."

Like me, Meena isn't a big fan of the word "empowerment." "It makes us sound like victims who need to be empowered," she says. "I am empowered. I am powerful. It's not my fault if systemic and structural issues are oppressing me." As for the narrative of "Women are lacking in ambition and confidence too"? "Well," she replies with a verbal wink, "I'm not."

The women we feature in this Beauty issue lack for nothing. Through the months of quarantine, our cover star, Cynthia Erivo, would record herself singing on Instagram (watch her rendition of Whitney Houston's "I Will Always Love You" if you want to weep). Cynthia never hits a wrong note, lyrically or tonally. She appears on our cover not only because she's beautiful, with a style wholly her own, but because she has that gift.

When I look at the women on this page, I love the distinctive stories they tell. From the iconic Dionne Warwick and Goldie Hawn (in retro couture and a pink bath towel, respectively) to young rapper Chika, they are performers from different eras with diverse currencies. Chika's frankness about mental health and body image—not to mention her music—have rocketed her to success. "We don't see an example of someone being able to be transparent and open with who they are and what they are going through," she says.

That's what Chika is ambitious for, and ambition is a beautiful thing. Enjoy the issue.

What Beauty Ritual Always Makes You Feel Better?

"I love using a warm oil and massaging it into my scalp and hair. I also diffuse essential oils in the evening. Both help put me to sleep."

MAKEDA SANDFORD
Photographer, "Fine Vintage," p. 79

"My skin-care routine. It allows me to unwind, and it's always the most peaceful moment in my day. When I give love to my skin, I feel like I am giving love to myself."

"Chika Boom," p. 106

"Putting on my makeup gives me comfort. It's time spent looking at myself in the mirror and thinking positively."

SHARON CHUTER Founder of Uoma Beauty,
"Sharon Chuter on Pulling Up for Change," p. 66

"A good, long bath using essential oils and a face mask—you can't forget your goodies!"

TERRELL MULLIN
Makeup Artist, "Beautiful Music," p. 97

"Flossing. Everyone needs to floss more. Nothing will give you a better feeling inside and out than cleansing yourself of the day's—or month's—mistakes."

SCAACHI KOUL Senior Culture Writer at BuzzFeed News and Host of the Podcast
Not Great with Scaachi Koul, "Beautiful Music," p. 97

"Hair and face steaming, masks, and hair treatments have become constant rituals lately. It's pure heaven."

LOCAL LEGEND

Words can't describe how special this was. To see one of the greats of our time, @drewbarrymore pouring love on a local paper that you pour yourself into each day is beyond words. I've worked at The Detroit News for three years now and I can tell you there's no harder-working and factual news outlet.

BEHIND THE SCENES WITH OUR OCTOBER COVER STAR, CYNTHIA ERIVO

Music was at the heart of our Los Angeles shoot, which was inspired by Cynthia Erivo's all-time favorite songs. The singer and actress rocked an Alberta Ferretti ensemble that echoed the funky vibe of "Let's Groove," by Earth, Wind & Fire; a red-hot Valentino trenchcoat (with a matching cat eye) to pay tribute to Rosalía's "Malamente"; and a showstopping Louis Vuitton collar to honor "Chain of Fools," by the Queen of Soul, Aretha Franklin. As Erivo and her glam team brought each look to life, they celebrated being reunited for the first time since the pandemic. "The music was loud, the laughter was louder, and everyone was dancing," says stylist Jason Bolden, who joined a Soul Train line with Erivo and makeup artist Terrell Mullin as "Nights over Egypt," by the Jones Girls, played between shots. "It felt like a '70s Harlem house party."

LABEL WE LOVE

Chelsea Paris

Following a three-year hiatus, the footwear favorite just relaunched with a jazzy selection worth ditching your quarantine slippers for. "It's the first work I've done on my own terms in a long time," says designer Theresa Ebagua, who drew on both 1920s motifs and her Nigerian heritage for her latest collection. "It's a fusion of art deco and African artistry."

ECZEMA: UNDER CONTROL. SO ROLL UP THOSE SLEEVES.

DUPIXENT is a breakthrough in the treatment of uncontrolled moderate-to-severe eczema (atopic dermatitis).

Approved for ages 6 years and up.

JASON, REAL PATIENT.
Individual results may vary.

HELP
WITHIN

DUPIXENT helps restore the look and feel of skin. And it's not a cream or steroid. It's a biologic that continuously treats eczema over time–even between flare-ups. See and feel a significant difference with:

Clearer skin • Fast itch relief

- In clinical trials at 16 weeks, 37% of adults and 24% of teens (ages 12-17) saw clear or almost clear skin vs 9% and 2% not on DUPIXENT.
- And 38% of adults and 37% of teens (ages 12-17) had significantly less itch vs 11% and 5% not on DUPIXENT.

TALK TO YOUR ECZEMA SPECIALIST AND VISIT DUPIXENT.COM OR CALL 1-844-DUPIXENT (1-844-387-4936)

INDICATION

DUPIXENT is a prescription medicine used to treat people aged 6 years and older with moderate-to-severe atopic dermatitis (eczema) that is not well controlled with prescription therapies used on the skin (topical), or who cannot use topical therapies. DUPIXENT can be used with or without topical corticosteroids. It is not known if DUPIXENT is safe and effective in children with atopic dermatitis under 6 years of age.

IMPORTANT SAFETY INFORMATION

Do not use if you are allergic to dupilumab or to any of the ingredients in DUPIXENT®.

Before using DUPIXENT, tell your healthcare provider about all your medical conditions, including if you: have eye problems; have a parasitic (helminth) infection; are scheduled to receive any vaccinations. You should not receive a "live vaccine" if you are treated with DUPIXENT; are pregnant or plan to become pregnant. It is not known whether DUPIXENT will harm your unborn baby. There is a pregnancy exposure registry for women who take DUPIXENT during pregnancy to collect information about the health of you and your baby. Your healthcare provider can enroll you or you may enroll yourself. To get more information about the registry call 1-877-311-8972 or go to https://mothertobaby.org/ongoing-study/dupixent/; are breastfeeding or plan to breastfeed. It is not known whether DUPIXENT passes into your breast milk.

Tell your healthcare provider about all the medicines you take, including prescription and over-the-counter medicines, vitamins and herbal supplements.

Especially tell your healthcare provider if you are taking oral, topical or inhaled corticosteroid medicines or if you have atopic dermatitis and asthma and use an asthma medicine. Do not change or stop your corticosteroid medicine or other asthma medicine without talking to your healthcare provider. This may cause other symptoms that were controlled by the corticosteroid medicine or other asthma medicine to come back.

DUPIXENT can cause serious side effects, including:

Allergic reactions (hypersensitivity), including a severe reaction known as anaphylaxis. Stop using DUPIXENT and tell your healthcare provider or get emergency help right away if you get any of the following symptoms: breathing problems, fever, general ill feeling, swollen lymph nodes, swelling of the face, mouth and tongue, hives, itching, fainting, dizziness, feeling lightheaded (low blood pressure), joint pain, or skin rash.

Eye problems. Tell your healthcare provider if you have any new or worsening eye problems, including eye pain or changes in vision.

The most common side effects in patients with atopic dermatitis include injection site reactions, eye and eyelid inflammation, including redness, swelling, and itching, and cold sores in your mouth or on your lips.

Tell your healthcare provider if you have any side effect that bothers you or that does not go away. These are not all the possible side effects of DUPIXENT. Call your doctor for medical advice about side effects. You are encouraged to report negative side effects of prescription drugs to the FDA. Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch, or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

Use DUPIXENT exactly as prescribed. Your healthcare provider will tell you how much DUPIXENT to inject and how often to inject it. DUPIXENT is an injection given under the skin (subcutaneous injection). If your healthcare provider decides that you or a caregiver can give DUPIXENT injections, you or your caregiver should receive training on the right way to prepare and inject DUPIXENT. Do not try to inject DUPIXENT until you have been shown the right way by your healthcare provider. In children 12 years of age and older, it is recommended that DUPIXENT be administered by or under supervision of an adult. In children younger than 12 years of age, DUPIXENT should be given by a caregiver.

Brief Summary of Important Patient Information about DUPIXENT® (dupilumab) Rx Only (DU-pix'-ent)
injection, for subcutaneous use

What is DUPIXENT?

- DUPIXENT is a prescription medicine used:
  - to treat people aged 6 years and older with moderate-to-severe atopic dermatitis (eczema) that is not well controlled with prescription therapies used on the skin (topical), or who cannot use topical therapies. DUPIXENT can be used with or without topical corticosteroids.
- DUPIXENT works by blocking two proteins that contribute to a type of inflammation that plays a major role in atopic dermatitis.
- It is not known if DUPIXENT is safe and effective in children with atopic dermatitis under 6 years of age.

Who should not use DUPIXENT?

Do not use DUPIXENT if you are allergic to dupilumab or to any of the ingredients in DUPIXENT. See the end of this summary of information for a complete list of ingredients in DUPIXENT.

What should I tell my healthcare provider before using DUPIXENT?

Before using DUPIXENT, tell your healthcare provider about all your medical conditions, including if you:

- have eye problems
- have a parasitic (helminth) infection
- are scheduled to receive any vaccinations. You should not receive a "live vaccine" if you are treated with DUPIXENT.
- are pregnant or plan to become pregnant. It is not known whether DUPIXENT will harm your unborn baby.
  - Pregnancy Exposure Registry. There is a pregnancy exposure registry for women who take DUPIXENT during pregnancy. The purpose of this registry is to collect information about the health of you and your baby. Your healthcare provider can enroll you in this registry. You may also enroll yourself or get more information about the registry by calling 1 877 311-8972 or going to https://mothertobaby.org/ongoing-study/dupixent/.
- are breastfeeding or plan to breastfeed. It is not known whether DUPIXENT passes into your breast milk.

Tell your healthcare provider about all of the medicines you take including prescription and over-the-counter medicines, vitamins, and herbal supplements.

Especially tell your healthcare provider if you:

- are taking oral, topical, or inhaled corticosteroid medicines
- have atopic dermatitis and asthma and use an asthma medicine

Do not change or stop your corticosteroid medicine or other asthma medicine without talking to your healthcare provider. This may cause other symptoms that were controlled by the corticosteroid medicine or other asthma medicine to come back.

How should I use DUPIXENT?

- See the detailed "Instructions for Use" that comes with DUPIXENT for information on how to prepare and inject DUPIXENT and how to properly store and throw away (dispose of) used DUPIXENT pre-filled syringes and pre-filled pens.
- Use DUPIXENT exactly as prescribed by your healthcare provider.
- Your healthcare provider will tell you how much DUPIXENT to inject and how often to inject it.
- DUPIXENT comes as a single-dose pre-filled syringe with needle shield or as a pre-filled pen.
- DUPIXENT is given as an injection under the skin (subcutaneous injection).
- If your healthcare provider decides that you or a caregiver can give the injections of DUPIXENT, you or your caregiver should receive training on the right way to prepare and inject DUPIXENT. Do not try to inject DUPIXENT until you have been shown the right way by your healthcare provider. In children 12 years of age and older, it is recommended that DUPIXENT be administered by or under supervision of an adult. In children younger than 12 years of age, DUPIXENT should be given by a caregiver.
- If your dose schedule is every other week and you miss a dose of DUPIXENT: Give the DUPIXENT injection within 7 days from the missed dose, then continue with your original schedule. If the missed dose is not given within 7 days, wait until the next scheduled dose to give your DUPIXENT injection.
- If your dose schedule is every 4 weeks and you miss a dose of DUPIXENT: Give the DUPIXENT injection within 7 days from the missed dose, then continue with your original schedule. If the missed dose is not given within 7 days, start a new every 4 week dose schedule from the time you remember to take your DUPIXENT injection.
- If you inject more DUPIXENT than prescribed, call your healthcare provider right away.
- Your healthcare provider may prescribe other medicines to use with DUPIXENT. Use the other prescribed medicines exactly as your healthcare provider tells you to.

What are the possible side effects of DUPIXENT?

DUPIXENT can cause serious side effects, including:

- Allergic reactions (hypersensitivity), including a severe reaction known as anaphylaxis. Stop using DUPIXENT and tell your healthcare provider or get emergency help right away if you get any of the following symptoms: breathing problems, fever, general ill feeling, swollen lymph nodes, swelling of the face, mouth and tongue, hives, itching, fainting, dizziness, feeling lightheaded (low blood pressure), joint pain, or skin rash.
- Eye problems. Tell your healthcare provider if you have any new or worsening eye problems, including eye pain or changes in vision.

The most common side effects of DUPIXENT in patients with atopic dermatitis include: injection site reactions, eye and eyelid inflammation, including redness, swelling and itching, and cold sores in your mouth or on your lips. Tell your healthcare provider if you have any side effect that bothers you or that does not go away.

These are not all of the possible side effects of DUPIXENT. Call your doctor for medical advice about side effects. You may report side effects to FDA.
Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch, or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

General information about the safe and effective use of DUPIXENT.

Medicines are sometimes prescribed for purposes other than those listed in a Patient Information leaflet. Do not use DUPIXENT for a condition for which it was not prescribed. Do not give DUPIXENT to other people, even if they have the same symptoms that you have. It may harm them.

This is a brief summary of the most important information about DUPIXENT for this use. If you would like more information, talk with your healthcare provider. You can ask your pharmacist or healthcare provider for more information about DUPIXENT that is written for healthcare professionals.

For more information about DUPIXENT, go to www.DUPIXENT.com

FE NOEL DESIGNER FELISHA NOEL
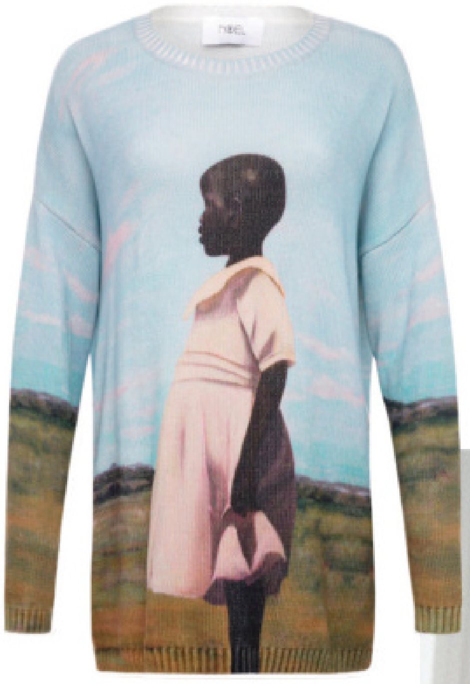
SHARES A FEW OF HER FAVORITE THINGS



COOL COLLAB
As a fan of contemporary art, I recently partnered with Cliffanie Forrester, a painter of Grenadian descent, on a sweater. It features her piece Uganda, which was shown at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in 2016 when she was just 18 years old. Fe Noel sweater, $1,495; fenoel.com.

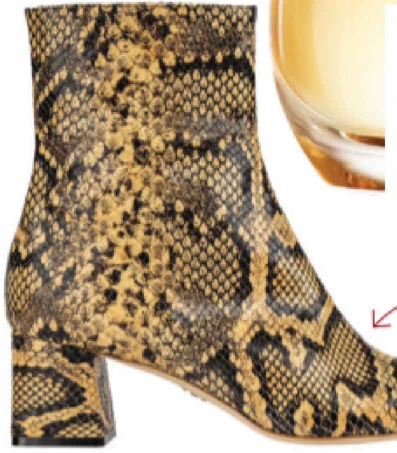
ISLAND ESCAPE
Grenada is my childhood home, and I still visit often. I'll stay either with family in the country or at the Silversands resort in Saint George's. It's a paradise within a paradise.

GOOD EATS
My go-to meal is usually something light, like branzino with sautéed veggies—although I also have a thing for pasta!

Signature Scent

I've worn J'adore by Dior for as long as I can remember. I get a bottle for Christmas every year without fail. Dior J'adore Eau de Parfum, $105/1.7 fl. oz.; dior.com.

BINGE WATCH
Even when I'm tired I try to catch up on The Marvelous Mrs. Maisel every night. I'm obsessed with the show.



Fave Footwear

Brother Vellies shoes make any outfit instantly sleek and stylish. I could pair them with a sweatsuit and still look good. Brother Vellies boots, $735; brothervellies.com.

Perfect Purse

I carry a ton of stuff around with me, but this roomy bowling bag fits it all. Givenchy bag, $1,950; givenchy.com.

BEST BASIC
This slouchy T-shirt has become one of my staples. Fe Noel T-shirt, $78; fenoel.com.

FALL PICK
I can't wait to pull out these luxe Ultrasuede pants once the weather gets crisp. Fe Noel pants, $268; fenoel.com.

FASHION HERO
Bethann Hardison has stayed relevant in this industry for over 50 years—all while fighting to make it more diverse.

SHARON CHUTER ON

Pulling Up for Change

THE GOSPEL OF BEAUTY was instilled in Sharon Chuter from a young age. Growing up in Nigeria, she watched her mother put on a red lip and a fresh coat of nail polish as she got ready for church. "Sunday services are like fashion week," Chuter says. Church is also where she found her voice. Not only did she secure a hard-won spot in the choir performing in front of hundreds of people, but she also honed her public-speaking skills while preaching to a smaller group of teenage congregants. Chuter's propensity for performing made her want to become the next Beyoncé, so, following her dream, she sang in a band at night and searched for a suitable day job.

It was during this time that she noticed the lack of beauty brands in her home country and decided to do something about it. After reaching out to all the major cosmetics companies, she landed a contract with Revlon, bringing its products to market in Nigeria for the first time. The move made Chuter realize she had innate business skills and inspired her to pursue a corporate career. She went on to hold executive positions at top companies within the industry, which proved to be an invaluable experience. But after 15 years, she wanted more for herself. "I was at a point where I realized I was culpable of complacency," she says. "I was sitting there using my skills to help companies that didn't care about people who looked like me."

So, in 2017, she left her corporate job and two years later launched Uoma Beauty. "It was not just about creating a brand but creating a home for everyone who was being left out." The Say What?! Foundation, which comes in 51 shades, quickly became one of the line's hero products. "People need to think about inclusivity as multidimensional in terms of application, targeting skin needs, tones and undertones, and shade range." She also shot her first Uoma Beauty campaign in Nigeria, which included local designers and models. It went on to win a 2019 Clio Award for excellence in advertising.

In June Chuter once again found herself using her voice for good. During the height of the Black Lives Matter movement, when many brands were quick to share a message of solidarity, Chuter encouraged them to strive for greater diversity in their staff. By posting a call for action on Instagram, she started the global social-media movement Pull Up for Change. Now that she's got everyone's attention, Chuter is not slowing down. "We have to keep educating and keep this going," she says. "We can't let it slip, because these are the types of things that are going to make a change." Preach! —ADELAIDE GIESEY

BEAUTY TALK

Issa Rae

THE EMMY NOMINEE AND COASTAL ELITES STAR ON SOCIAL-DISTANCED HANGS, HER SECRET FOR "POPPING" SKIN, AND BEING IN A RELATIONSHIP WITH HER HAIR

This year has been heavy. How have you managed to still find joy? This has been a time to get significantly closer to my family. We're making it a point to talk so much more, especially my siblings, and that's been kind of the bright spot. I also got so tired of not seeing my best friend. I was like, "Girl, can we just do a COVID-safe playdate?" And she was down. That was the closest to normalcy that I'd had in a minute.

You also basically cleaned up with multiple Emmy nominations for Insecure. That definitely didn't hurt. It really set in when I heard Yvonne [Orji] got nominated. I called her and said, "Does this make all the Molly hate worth it?" And she was like, "Yes!" [laughs] It was just a dope feeling to be recognized in that way.

I feel like everyone's got a glow since being at home. How has your beauty routine shifted during quarantine? Oh my god, my skin is so popping right now. I'm not putting on pounds of makeup every day for a shoot, and I'm not extremely stressed. I'm sleeping a bit more, drinking water, and trying new skin-care products. Usually I'm scared to try new things, but I've been loving experimenting at this time. One of my recent faves is the Nourishing Face Cream by Retrouvé. And I still love Dr. [Barbara] Sturm products.

Which ones? I've been using her Hyaluronic Acid Serum for a while, and it's really making a difference. We are in the writers' room [working on the next season of Insecure], and when I show up in the morning after leaving the serum on, I get compliments even though I don't have any makeup on.

We need to talk hair too. I love that you're always showing off the versatility of your 4C coils. I have been natural for most of my life. I didn't start embracing my hair until college, but I still didn't have a handle on it. Then I went through a period in 2010 where I did too much to it, and I did the big chop. But [stylist] Felicia Leatherwood was the game changer for me. She has been instrumental in helping me to see all the things I can do with my hair and taught me how to take care of it. She honestly likes my hair better than she likes me! To have someone literally love your hair, like, how can you not love it yourself?

You're producing a documentary for HBO called Seen & Heard that focuses on the contributions of Black Hollywood. Who is your TV hero? Moesha. I just rewatched the pilot [on Netflix], and I got so in my feelings. Seeing her meant so much to me as a Black girl in high school in L.A. She was just so cool. I don't think I realized how much I took that imagery for granted. —KAYLA GREAVES

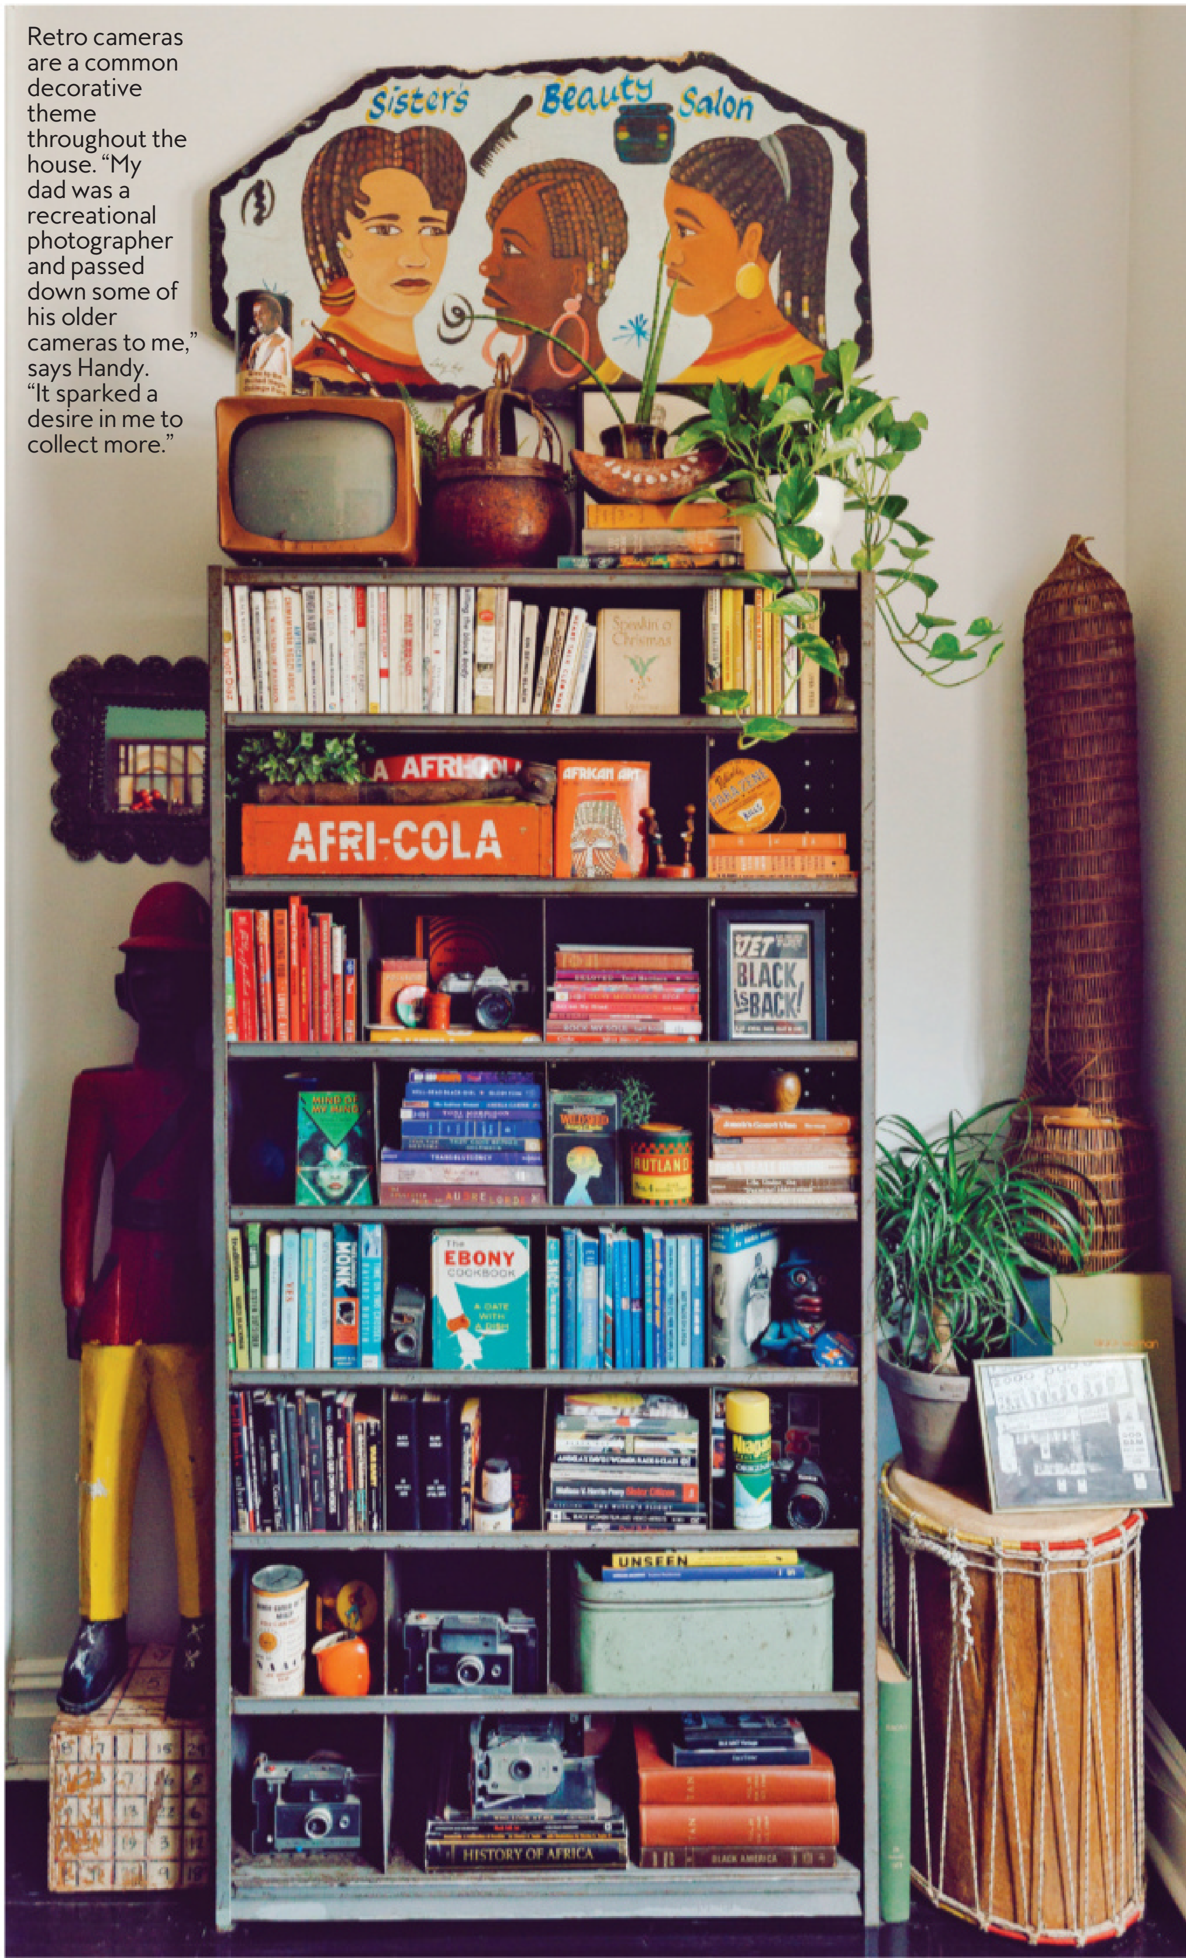
Antiques experts and cute couple KIYANNA STEWART and JANNAH HANDY fill their home with meaningful historical finds

by ALISON SYRETT
photographed by MAKEDA SANDFORD



Retro cameras are a common decorative theme throughout the house. “My dad was a recreational photographer and passed down some of his older cameras to me,” says Handy. “It sparked a desire in me to collect more.”

There are entertaining anecdotes behind most of the secondhand objects on display in Kiyanna Stewart and Jannah Handy’s Jersey City, N.J., brownstone home. But one of the pair’s favorite stories revolves around their bookcase, a giant repurposed military storage unit (shown right). “I think it’s about the size and weight of five adults,” says Stewart, recalling how the cabinet’s seller doubted their ability to haul it away without the help of a man. But the duo managed to heave it onto the roof of their car, drive for three hours, and push it up the stairs of their house. “We were scraped up and crying,” says Handy. “I’ve already told our landlord: ‘It’s staying here forever!’ ” Now the piece is an integral part of their living room, a hub for reading (as former Rutgers professors, they have a shared love of academic texts; Handy is also a fantasy fiction fan) and managing their joint business, BLK MKT Vintage, a Brooklyn store and rental service specializing in heirlooms and collectibles from Black culture. Extra-special items spanning a wide array of themes—from barbershop memorabilia to traditional folk instruments—are sprinkled throughout their home, while muted greens and sienna hues tie the décor together. “My favorite colors are seafoam and hunter green, while Jannah loves orange,” explains Stewart. “So our palette happened by accident.” Handy, however, has another explanation: “We just complement each other really well.”

Overlooking the living room is a wall of woven baskets above a long staircase. .

THE PLACE

Salt Lake City

QUEER EYE'S FASHION EXPERT TAN FRANCE ON THE BEST SPOTS IN AND AROUND HIS SCENIC HOMETOWN

WHERE TO GO I've lived in Utah for 12 years, and it only gets better. It's a visually stunning state filled with kind and hospitable people. Salt Lake City, my primary home, is a wonderful place to visit because it offers urban living with the mountains just a 10-minute drive away.

WHERE TO STAY AND EAT My favorite hotel in town is the Grand America (1); it's a bit of a splurge but gorgeous. The area's local food options are fantastic. I think Tokai Sushi has the best sushi outside Japan—I recommend the black crunch, the flower, and the shrimp killer rolls—and you have to try the Kouign Amann pastries at Les Madeleines (2) bakery. We also get very excited about brunch in Utah. A few popular spots include Ruth's Diner (3), where you can eat in a converted trolley car, and the Park Café, which offers delicious and massive meals for no more than $15.

WHAT TO DO The Natural History and Leonardo museums both have beautiful things to look at. For shopping, stop by antiques warehouse Euro Treasures and the Stockist, a fashion and lifestyle boutique. I love going to the Cliff Lodge (4) just outside the city to lounge in a hot tub on the roof and enjoy the view. And if you have time for a longer trip, consider driving a few hours out to Zion National Park (5) to camp. The landscape is renowned for its otherworldly red rock and spectacular rivers. You'll never see anything else like it!

WHAT TO PACK Outdoorsy layers are essential for sightseeing all day. Planning to hike? Don't forget sturdy footwear and a wide-brimmed hat to block out the sun.

CHEF KRISTEN KISH AND HER FIANCÉE, BIANCA DUSIC, REMINISCE ABOUT DISHES THAT TAKE THEM BACK TO THEIR ROOTS

BY KERRY DIAMOND
PHOTOGRAPHED BY JOHNNY MILLER

When asked about her favorite comfort food, Kristen Kish—Top Chef champion, Le Cordon Bleu culinary school grad, and head chef at the Arlo Grey restaurant in Austin, Texas—rattles off a surprising combo: "Fried chicken fingers, french fries, ranch dressing, and mayo," she says. "And it has to be takeout. That would be my last meal, forever and ever."

Despite her credentials, Kish is clearly no food snob, and neither is her fiancée, Australian-born hospitality executive Bianca Dusic. When they were falling in love, Dusic introduced Kish to a childhood favorite of hers. "I bought a small toastie maker so I could make Kristen canned-spaghetti toasties," says Dusic, who works with the Standard hotel group. For the uninitiated, these toasted-bread sandwiches can be stuffed with anything from cheese to baked beans to, yes, even SpaghettiOs. Given the duo are now engaged, the concoction must have been a hit.

Foods that remind us of less complicated times are understandably having a moment right now. "Everyone has their own version," says Kish, who was raised in Michigan. "I grew up on classic Midwestern dishes like my grandmother's cabbage rolls and meat loaf. They are comforting because they remind me of home." While Kish waits for Arlo Grey—her stylish riverside restaurant in the Line Austin hotel—to reopen post-pandemic, she has been testing nostalgia-inducing recipes like ice-cream sandwiches with a twist. "When I was a little girl, my parents would always make box brownies," Kish recalls. "We'd scoop them out of the pan while they were still warm and top them with vanilla ice cream. My dad would also put honey-roasted peanuts on his." Recently, Kish merged this taste memory with mochi—the glutinous rice paste used in some Japanese desserts—and substituted rice flour for all-purpose flour in her brownie mix for a chewier, denser texture. "The easiest place for me to go to when I'm creating a new recipe is back to the very humble food I know from my upbringing," says Kish. "I tap into why I love it, and then I create something new around that."

MOCHI BROWNIE ICE-CREAM SANDWICHES MAKES 10

FOR THE MOCHI BROWNIES
- 4 oz. dark chocolate, in pieces
- 4 tbsp unsalted butter
- ¾ cup granulated sugar
- 2 eggs
- ⅓ cup cocoa powder
- 2 cups almond or whole milk
- 2 tsp vanilla extract
- 1 tsp kosher salt
- 1½ cups sweet rice flour
- 1 tsp baking powder
- 1 quart vanilla ice cream, or your favorite ice-cream flavor

FOR THE CANDIED PEANUTS
- ¾ cup dry-roasted peanuts, lightly salted
- ½ cup granulated sugar

1 Preheat oven to 350°F. 2 Line two 8" x 8" pans with parchment paper and lightly grease with butter. 3 Melt the chocolate and butter in a double boiler over medium heat. 4 In a large bowl, whisk together the sugar, eggs, and cocoa powder. 5 Slowly whisk in the melted chocolate and butter. 6 Add in milk, vanilla, and salt. 7 In another bowl, whisk together the rice flour and baking powder. 8 Combine the mixtures, and pour evenly into the two pans. 9 Bake for 35 minutes or until a toothpick comes out clean. Allow to cool. 10 Spread half the ice cream over the brownies in the first pan, and sprinkle candied peanuts (optional, recipe below) on top. 11 Cover with the remaining ice cream. 12 Carefully remove brownies from the second pan and place on top of the ice cream. Press down slightly, cover with plastic, and freeze for 24 hours. 13 Remove, and cut into desired portions.

CANDIED PEANUTS 1 Cover a sheet tray with slightly greased parchment paper. 2 Arrange peanuts into a medium-size pile. 3 In a small nonstick sauce pan, add sugar and a few tablespoons of water. Do not stir. 4 Over medium heat melt the sugar until it caramelizes and turns into an amber color. 5 Pour hot sugar over the peanuts. Let cool. 6 Transfer to a zip-top bag and smash with the back of a metal spoon until the pieces are pea size.

Kiersey Clemons with Booty

THE EFFERVESCENT ACTRESS FINDS A KINDRED SPIRIT IN HER ENERGETIC POOCH

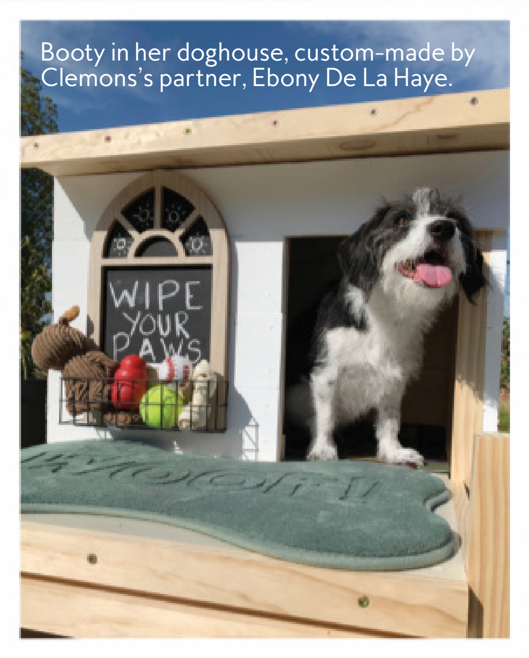
What's the story behind Booty's name? I gave it to her because she has lots of jelly; things jiggle when she walks, if you know what I mean. She's a sass monster. I adopted her from a shelter in Harlem while filming in New York City, and they said she was called Pebbles. I was like, "I'm so sorry about that. You're way too fun for a horrible name like Pebbles."

What set her apart from the other dogs? She wasn't too eager, and I liked that about her—how she held a bit back for mystery. I had to work for her attention! Then a few weeks later I found out she was sick with bronchitis when we met, and she's actually a lot wilder than I thought. She played me, but I'm so happy she did.

What would you say is her most human quality? Everyone naturally calls her a "he" because she just exudes a nonbinary vibe. She's like, "I don't care—I am here to be an example!" I love how she makes that statement.

How do you dress when you and Booty are out and about? I'm a very functional dog mom and keep things compact and efficient with pockets or a fanny pack. It's especially important that I can stash some treats when we're training or around other dogs. Then I have the power!

How did you keep her occupied while filming Antebellum? Since I'm so busy on set, she stays at "grandma's," where she gets very spoiled. My mom sends me photos of her doing things she's not supposed to, like sleeping in the bed. She just lives it up over there.



Booty in her doghouse, custom-made by Clemons's partner, Ebony De La Haye.

MODEL AND MUAY THAI FIGHTER MIA KANG KICKED TRADITIONAL BEAUTY STANDARDS TO THE CURB. NOW SHE'S INSPIRING OTHERS TO DO THE SAME

Why She's a Badass After bursting onto the modeling scene at age 13, Hong Kong–raised beauty Mia Kang quickly made a name for herself in the global fashion industry. She simultaneously kept up with her studies, eventually earning a master's degree in finance and financial law. At one point she left the modeling biz to become a commodities trader but then returned to the runway in her mid-20s. Shortly after that, in 2017, she landed a spot in Sports Illustrated's famed swimsuit issue as a contender for Rookie of the Year. But her success came at a price. Since the start of her career, Kang has battled eating disorders and anxiety. And by the time she hit her late 20s, Kang was burned out. So she took a break to travel and see family living in Thailand. It's there that she discovered a passion for the martial art of Muay Thai, which in turn gave her the strength to tackle body-image issues head-on. Now, with her début book, Knockout, out this month, the 31-year-old is rewriting the rules for body standards within her industry and beyond. "I never thought I'd be able to have a healthy relationship with food or my body," she says. "Now I want to tell everybody that recovery and happiness are possible. That's why I'm putting my story out there."

KNOCKOUT
A MEMOIR

Fighting Spirit For Kang, Muay Thai—a combat sport involving punches, kicks, and elbow and knee strikes—was always about more than winning. "I connected to the philosophical part of martial arts more so than the physical," she says. " 'Cause, yeah, it's a great workout. But there was something else in it for me." The practice proved to be the jolt she needed to go back into modeling with an uncompromising attitude. "The most badass thing I've ever done wasn't beating someone up [in a professional fight]," she says. "It was telling everybody who told me what I was supposed to look like that I'm not going to look like that anymore."

"Be kind, but take no shit."

Clockwise from top: Kang in a Muay Thai ring in Thailand; practicing knee strikes; her book, Knockout.

Model Mission Kang was visiting Thailand in mid-February when the country's borders shut down in response to the coronavirus pandemic, and she's been there ever since. She has stayed sane through this tough time by focusing on the final edits of her book and reflecting on what this period has taught her. "Especially now, being able to say you are a conscious, responsible human being is more important than losing 5 pounds or having abs," she says. "Women are tired of being told what they should look like. It's time to normalize normalness. And I want to create that safe and honest space for people to feel good about themselves." —SHALAYNE PULIA

Jane Says

WITH VIRTUAL CLIMATE PROTESTS, A NEW WELLNESS GIG, AND PLENTY OF READING MATERIAL, JANE FONDA IS MAKING THE MOST OF HER TIME AT HOME

How have you managed to stay calm throughout quarantine? I go for walks. I meditate. I work out. I watch television at night and sleep nine hours. One day looks like the next. But I consider myself fortunate—my home is paid for, and I don't have to worry about food, so I am very privileged. I do a lot of work on the Zoom and spend time having meetings and doing Fire Drill Fridays [climate-change rallies].

You're now the face of the CBD and hemp brand Uncle Bud's too. Would you describe yourself as chill? I don't think anybody who knows me well would say I am a chill kind of person. I'm pretty intense. But I do spend a chunk of every day reading on the couch, which I guess is chill! Right now I'm reading Dark Money, by Jane Mayer, which I should've read several years ago, but I didn't get around to it.

Does incorporating CBD into your routine help you to relax? I'm not ever tense, really, so I don't use it for that. [laughs] I do have a dose pen with CBD oil in it. My doctor told me to get rid of all sleeping pills and use that instead, so I've been doing that for years. It's great for sleep. People have given me jars of different CBD products to use on my joints because I have osteoarthritis, but they never worked. Then I tried the oils and rub-ons from Uncle Bud's, which really help me with sore muscles. I'm also a fan of their overnight face mask and body lotion.

Do you think there's a misconception that people who use CBD are stoners? Yes. But I think using CBD will only become more common in the wellness industry and, hopefully, the manufacturing industry. I have clothes made of hemp from China, and there's no reason we can't grow hemp to make clothes here. A friend of mine, an indigenous leader named Winona LaDuke, is trying to make hemp a major part of the American materials production. It was a big deal early on—many of our founding fathers used it. Henry Ford even built a car out of hemp! It ran on hemp oil too.

You've continued to call for climate-change action, hosting weekly virtual rallies from home. What keeps you motivated? The cause—making sure there is a livable future. We have barely 10 years to cut our fossil-fuel emissions in half. A catastrophe is looming, and I don't need any more inspiration to do everything I can. I follow the news carefully, but it doesn't get me down. Instead, I get angry, and that motivates me. I think we are going to make a difference and that, ultimately, we will win. So I don't ever leave that mindset. It's my life.

Has the pandemic shifted or expanded your priorities as an activist? I'm doing all I can; I'm not sure I could do any more! [laughs] Things I've been aware of for a long time have become more obvious, like the terrible inequities exposed by the COVID-19 pandemic. People are realizing how many workers can barely make ends meet in the best of times and are suffering now. I've also been studying racism for quite a while, so I'm pleased to see people of all races, age groups, and physical abilities at protests.

What are you hopeful for in the future? It would excite me to see our factories churning out electric cars, to see former fossil-fuel workers building a smart grid across the country, and to see former oil-pipeline workers bringing decent pipelines to places like Flint, Mich., where the ability to get clean water is so compromised. I also get excited watching my grandson grow. He's 1 year old, and I miss hugging him. We FaceTime a lot! I have grown-up grandkids too—one is in college and the other is a senior in high school.

With everything shut down now, do you miss getting dressed up for Hollywood events? No. I don't care if I ever do that again. I don't enjoy it; I never have. Last fall, I vowed that I would never buy another article of clothing, and I haven't.

What are you most excited to do when all of this is over? Well, there's a lot to protest right now, so I can't wait to be able to protest in person. And also to get arrested! [laughs] —SAMANTHA SIMON

> "I don't think anybody who knows me well would say I am a chill kind of person."

CELEBRATING OUR

HEROES

For those on the front lines of the COVID-19 pandemic in New York, every day carried a new set of challenges. Medical specialists found themselves switching fields at a moment's notice to care for a surge of sick patients, while nurses helped families communicate and provided critical updates via video chat. The demands were unthinkable, but our essential healthcare workers continued to show up and give their all. Below, four heroic women share the trials and triumphs of their fight against COVID-19.

"What I learned during this pandemic is the power of community. I'm blessed to work with people who ultimately put their lives on the line every day to help others."

- DANA, Nurse Practitioner

"As a Black female physician, I see how my community has been disproportionately affected by the pandemic, and the deaths of countless Black men and women adds another layer of sadness. At the end of all this, I hope that we come out a stronger and more inclusive society."

- SUDHI, OBGYN

"Working through COVID-19 was a physical and emotional challenge. I learned a new specialty in a matter of days while caring for the sickest patients I have ever seen, but I am so grateful for my coworkers and community who came together for this cause."

- LAUREN, Physician Assistant

"Our greatest challenges often bring out our greatest strengths. I am inspired by the strength my colleagues exhibited during the pandemic."

- ELLEN, Director of Nursing

I

It's mid-August, we're still in a global pandemic, and everyone has Zoom-call fatigue. The novelty is lost at this point: another day in which we're slumped into a chair, staring into someone's pixelated face, yearning for connection. But then Cynthia Erivo appears with a big smile that reveals a disarming gap between her front teeth, her smooth, ASMR-friendly voice filling your speakers, and suddenly video conferences are much less tedious.

She's calling from her home in Los Angeles, the closest we can get in our wretched time of coronavirus. If she is trying to appear casual, Erivo, who has propped herself up against her closet doors, still looks pretty glamorous. She is wearing an off-the-shoulder yellow tartan top; long, coffin-shaped nails in blacks and maroons; thick-rimmed brown geometric glasses; and a treasure chest's worth of gold and sparkly jewelry. Her vibe is relaxed, but she admits it's partially because she is safely ensconced at home. "I'm not really going to lots of places," she says while tugging at a string of freshwater pearls from her Iranian grandmother. "I still haven't been out to eat. I can't bring myself to go to a restaurant. I'm very specific about the places I visit."

Whether you're watching Erivo onscreen, in the theater, or on her social-media feeds, you can look at her and see what's possible. She is a Broadway star, an Oscar-nominated actress, an activist, and an agent of delight. "I was 5 years old the first time I sang, and I noticed right away that it made people happy," she says. "You might not have the words for whatever you're feeling, but I might have the song for it. Let's do that. I'll keep doing that."

Born in London to Nigerian parents, Erivo didn't grow up in a musical household, but she found the notes anyway after she sang "Silent Night" in a Nativity play in school. Years later she started to work toward a degree in music psychology, only to change focus and go to the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art in London instead. There were a few spots on British television—like on Chewing Gum—and some stage roles and musicals. But then, in 2013, she played Celie Johnson in a London production of The Color Purple. By 2015, she was on Broadway, and a year later she was awarded a Tony, a Grammy, and an Emmy for playing Celie.

It's clear that Erivo's calling, release, and future are always connected to music. She has established her Instagram account as a space for comfort and kinship, whether it's through performing heartfelt songs like John Lennon's "Imagine" or Donny Hathaway's "Someday We'll Be Free" or promoting the works of up-and-coming artists. "I always say that music is universal," says Erivo, who recommends that everyone take singing lessons at least once in their life for this very reason. "Whether or not you can sing, we all speak that language; we just have different dialects." Giving back to her followers is how Erivo has been able to find solace for herself as well. "After George [Floyd], after Breonna [Taylor], I was, like, deeply sad. I was just sad, tearful, crying. I couldn't really shift the feeling," she says. "I thought, 'Wouldn't it be nice if I could use this platform to spark joy?' If anything, that's my job."

Last year Erivo fully established herself in the Hollywood sphere following the release of Kasi Lemmons's Harriet, a biopic about abolitionist Harriet Tubman, in which she played the lead. She immediately netted Golden Globe and Oscar nominations for both best actress in a drama and best original song, respectively. Plus, she filmed The Outsider, a miniseries based on the Stephen King novel, which débuted on HBO in January. Now that Erivo has a hot minute to breathe, she says that she's “actually learned how to relax.” She's buying plants, creating her own workspace, doing her nails, sleeping eight hours a night, and playing with her new toys: an Oculus VR headset that is loaded with dance games and an AromaTech diffuser that ensures her house always smells lovely. She's also devouring episodes of Michaela Cole's I May Destroy You because “it's brilliant and doesn't paint Black British women as monoliths.”

In her latest project, to be released this fall, Erivo is stepping into the shoes of another larger-than-life icon of African American history: Aretha Franklin. “She just lived truly, fully,” Erivo says of the famed Motor City songstress, whom she is portraying for National Geographic's “Genius” series. “I do think there has to be a point where we stop being afraid of seeing Black people be Black. And people are afraid when it's on display proudly. I don't know how to hide my Blackness, so I live in it as it is. I really love it.”

When she describes Franklin's voice and skill, it's clear that Erivo is a singer's singer. She demonstrates how Franklin sang from the middle of the throat by dragging her long nails up and down the side of her neck while breaking out into a Cheshire-cat grin. “She just naturally had a really open sound, and so volume wasn't the thing she would use; it was just depth,” says Erivo of Franklin's four-octave range. “She used her voice like a violin.”

Erivo's activism is just as important to her as her art. She's currently co-leading a GoFundMe for DRK Beauty, a digital community that supports free therapy for women of color. “[Black women] aren't always given the opportunity to take a minute to discuss how we're feeling, to process our feelings, and to get other people's help to do that,” she says. “I am aware of how brutal this time is, and some of us just don't have the space or the means to have people help us. So I want to help.”

Helped, she has, and not just stateside. Earlier this year she came across a viral video of an 11-year-old Nigerian ballet dancer, Anthony Madu, twirling and plié-ing barefoot in muddy rain puddles. Using her connections, Erivo was able to secure a scholarship for Madu at the esteemed American Ballet Theatre in New York, essentially changing the direction of his life. “Anthony is going to work with ABT because a group of people came together to lift him up,” Erivo says. “The beauty in all this is that we should always lend a hand when we can.”

Speaking of beauty, it's impossible to ignore Erivo's colorful and chameleonic accents, which make her stand out wherever she goes. “I have never put limits on what I want to wear and what I want to look like,” she says. “I love high femme, I love high glamour, I love all those things.” She's as comfortable dyeing her hair green, loading on multiple piercings and assorted jewelry, and walking a red carpet in a big gown as she is in more traditional London street-style attire, like loungewear and sneakers. “I guess you can call it androgyny,” she says. “It all feels very much like me.”

Staying true to herself is what makes Erivo—who admits that she picks projects based on what allows her to access “her little tool bag of tricks”—such a hot ticket. She's focused on feeding her creative soul and singing the notes that get to the core of us all: “I'm arms wide open. What's next? If it works, then I'll do it.” ■

Chika BOOM!

After blazing her own trail into the heart of the hip-hop scene, the much-beloved rapper CHIKA is here to stay

by PEYTON DIX photographed by ALISSA ASHLEY styled by ICON BILLINGSLEY

Twenty-three-year-old rapper Jane "Chika" Oranika took a chance on herself before anyone else did. A mere three years ago, when she was a freshman at the University of Alabama, she made the decision to drop out to chase her dreams of becoming a performer. As a first-generation American born to Nigerian parents, she had some explaining to do before they gave her free rein. "I told them, 'Hey, college is applied time toward your career, so if I apply my time outside of college toward the career I want, it might work out,' " she says. Her Twitter feed, where she frequently posts comedic bits and freestyle verses, soon became a hot spot for viral videos that caught the attention of music-world luminaries like Diddy, Beyoncé, and Erykah Badu.

Since then Chika has released three EPs; her latest, Industry Games, dropped in March and was decreed by Billboard to be an album that "cements her spot as the name to know in hip-hop." Having earned her stripes on the Internet, Chika, who identifies as queer, has gained a following for her charm, her transparency, and a gap tooth that the ladies love. She's open about identity politics and managing her mental health. Plus, she's got ambition, rhythm, and style. Last year Calvin Klein's global head of creative credited Chika's authenticity as the reason for casting her in the #MyCalvins underwear campaign. As someone who prides herself on living and acting with intent, Chika feels that beauty comes from within. "If you have a rotten soul, I can tell you're not gonna be as hot as you would be if you were a good person," she says with a laugh.

> "I like my body. I don't get no complaints."

You've spoken up about the pitfalls of social media, and yet that is how you got your start. How would you describe your relationship with the Internet? I was raised by it. Being able to break into my career this way has been such a surreal and humbling experience. But it also taught me to seek validation based on engagement. That can cause your mental health to decline when your engagement does. Now I create the Internet I want. If I don't want to wear makeup, I won't. If I don't want to give a verse, I'm not going to force myself to.

Have you always been so outspoken about mental-health issues? Yes. I think it is important. We are on this earth to make sure that whatever mark we leave when we are gone is one that is lasting. I think a lot of the reason we suffer in silence is because we don't see an example of someone being able to be transparent and open with who they are and what they are going through. So, [clears throat] enter me. [laughs] It's simply in my nature to be this person. Has it been nurtured over time? Yes.

How has your relationship with your family evolved since coming out and dropping out of school? And now being... famous! I had a very rocky relationship with my parents growing up. I was a different child, and they didn't know what the hell to do with me. I came home one time and ended up talking to my mom about wanting to be a musician and how it was a fire that was burning inside of me. I also talked to her about my sexuality. It was a three-hour conversation. We just started talking and never stopped. And that is not something that a lot of African kids, first-gen kids throughout the diaspora, typically get. We don't get that luxury of openness. And so now the transition that I've experienced into adulthood is

Bruno Sialelli

As seen from the FaceTime window on my laptop, Lanvin's creative director, Bruno Sialelli, is achieving #vacationgoals. Against a backdrop of cerulean skies and bright pink oleanders, wearing a Hawaiian shirt and a faded black denim Anchors Aweigh–style sailor cap, he lights an ultra-slim cigarette, his carnelian signet ring flashing in the sun, and grins like a cat who ate the canary. Sialelli rented a villa for his parents, partner, and siblings as well as a few close friends in Cassis, a beautiful historic port town on the Mediterranean Sea near Marseille, where he grew up. What they say about French people and their fierce adherence to vacation is true. (We're not judging.) Sialelli didn't take one last year, when he had only a few weeks to put together Lanvin's winter 2019 collection, his first for the label. It came at a crucial inflection point for the troubled house. Now, with the company getting back on track thanks to his expansive new direction, Sialelli can take a proper French break. He's earned it.

It always requires a few seasons for things to come together when you're remaking a legacy brand. With the winter 2020 collection shown on these pages, Lanvin has arrived. Soft tailoring comes in vibrant color combinations with enough structuring to say something interesting but comprehensible; jewel-toned leather meets happy silk chiffon prints, shirred and ruffled into mermaid-hem dresses that float when you walk. (A sentimental favorite of Sialelli's, they're inspired by the cancan dresses of La Belle Époque, a creative golden age in France at the turn of the 20th century, when house founder and namesake Jeanne Lanvin opened the business.) At the show, boys and girls came down the runway, and the clothes were gently ungendered and utterly coherent. Sialelli is especially proud of the dresses and the tailoring, which wasn't a standout for women at Lanvin before. "It was very sexy and quite empowering," he says.

One of the first things Sialelli did when he arrived was blend the men's and women's departments into one open-plan workroom to get everyone on the same page. "This is the way people are shopping now," he says of the combined approach. "If I find something that excites me in a women's collection, I buy it." But then "I wear fashion," Sialelli says of his closet full of Comme des Garçons and Prada.

A year and a half ago, Lanvin was in disarray. It had been acquired by Fosun—a Chinese conglomerate that also owns Club Med, not exactly a known quantity in the luxury sector—and its legacy was in jeopardy. In the minds of the press, retailers, and customers, Lanvin still hadn't recovered from the dramatic 2015 exit of Alber Elbaz, arguably one of the most revered womenswear designers in recent history. (The only others who spark such fangirl devotion are Phoebe Philo, formerly of Céline, and the late Azzedine Alaïa.) Lanvin's previous owner, Shaw-Lan Wang, who hired Elbaz in 2001, had gone through subsequent creatives quickly—Bouchra Jarrar, who for two seasons offered variations on a tuxedo, and then Olivier Lapidus, he of the logofied T-shirt "e-couture" nonsense. The wardrobe potential of Lanvin was an itch waiting to be scratched.

Jeanne Lanvin was widely considered to be a fashion visionary. She began as a milliner who made pretty dresses for her daughter and evolved her offerings in the early 1900s, when categories were quite rigid, into a 360-degree company with women's and men's day- and eveningwear, perfume, even home design. United by a practical luxury sensibility, Lanvin was among the first "brands" as we understand them today. So much for the 20th century. By the time Sialelli started, no one knew what Lanvin stood for anymore.

Sialelli came to this tricky job with confidence born of experience. Just 32 now, he had

Stay GOLDIE

Even in tough times, GOLDIE HAWN is an eternal optimist

as told to JENNIFER FERRISE

Happiness is an inside job. It's all about how you choose to view life. In difficult times, we still have to find the joy. And laughing is so extraordinarily healthy for the mind and body. It changes our cells; it changes our breathing. And it's contagious! People have asked me, "What makes you laugh the most?" And I think a better question is what doesn't make me laugh.

In my family we all have the same sense of humor. It's abstract. It's circumstantial. It's a lot of filthy jokes. And we have no trouble laughing at each other either. I'm quarantining in the mountains with Kurt [Russell, Hawn's longtime partner] and the kids, and we've been RVing a lot. We rented a big one that is kind of the mother ship, and the other day, Kurt was hugging the right side of the road, when our son Wyatt [Russell] passed us in his van. I thought, "Wow, he must be speeding!" But it turned out Kurt was barely going 50 mph on the freeway, and we had a trail of cars behind us. [laughs] It was so simple, but when we sat around the campfire that night, the laughs went on for 15 minutes straight, which shows what asses we all are.

I've spent a lot of my life trying to make people laugh. For an actor and a comedian, it's a gift to be able to make someone else feel good. So in these tough times, I'm still trying to be in service in some way, only now it's with my organization, MindUP, which gives children the tools to manage their anxiety and face challenges with optimism. I started it almost 20 years ago, right after 9/11, when there were lots of kids who were feeling uncertain about the future. Parents were frenzied too, and I knew I wanted to help in any way I could.

This pandemic has similarly turned kids and adults inside out. In my own life I've been trying to refocus and appreciate the smaller moments. When I wake up, Kurt brings me coffee, which is just the sweetest, and it starts the day off great. I have my dogs in the bed with me, and I snuggle with them for a while. We have breakfast with the kids and sit around and talk. And then I go on a bike ride with Kate [Hudson, Hawn's daughter]. As scary as this time is, I try to savor every moment because I get to be with my family. This is an experience that we will all remember and learn so much from.

Still, we all have bad days. Like the other day, for instance, I started thinking, "Will I ever travel again? Will I ever see a Broadway play again? Will I ever work again?" It's easy to let these things loom over you. That's when it's time to get outside to take a deep breath or meditate, even if it's just for 10 minutes. We all need self-care. And being the best version of yourself is always a work in progress.

Whenever I am feeling a little down, I turn on some music and dance. Before I ever started acting, I was a professional dancer. So still to this day, I can't sit down for more than an hour without moving. [laughs] My mantra is, "Dance like no one is watching." So I put on some rock and roll and jump around on my trampoline. It's the greatest! Even when I'm at the market, if a good song comes on, I move around to it. My son Oliver [Hudson] says, "Mom, you're so...open." [laughs] And I say, "I'm just free!" I don't censor myself when it comes to my feelings.

When the pandemic is finally over, I have many things I want to do. I want to sit at a bar with my daughter and have a martini and see people again. I want to go back to Greece, London, and India and take a beautiful bike ride in Switzerland. I really do miss the fun of seeing new places. But human beings are adaptable. So at this moment in time, I'm just feeling grateful for my work and that I can see my family and create these memories of being together. Even if we are driving 50 mph on the freeway and everyone is honking at us. [laughs]

> "In my family we all have the same sense of humor. It's abstract. It's circumstantial. It's a lot of filthy jokes."

Walk On By

While she eagerly awaits her return to the stage, DIONNE WARWICK opens up about her couture-buying habit, low-key beauty rituals, and why Beyoncé is the best

by T. COLE RACHEL

Despite being one of the most celebrated recording artists of the past century and selling more than 100 million records, famed vocalist Dionne Warwick admits that her iconic sense of style didn't just happen by accident. Rather, it was a case of legends teaching legends. "Marlene Dietrich threw out all of my clothes!" says Warwick, laughing on the phone from her home in New Jersey while recalling an incident in which Dietrich visited her backstage at the Olympia in Paris and literally tossed her stagewear out the door. "She just decided, 'You're going to learn how to truly dress. If you're going to walk out on this stage, this is how you do it. This is what you should look like.' She introduced me to couture, as she loved to say. Much to the chagrin of my accountants, I became very, very accustomed to couture."

Warwick's sartorial past plays a big role in the new documentary House of Cardin, P. David Ebersole and Todd Hughes's deep dive into the life and work of the French designer Pierre Cardin. In addition to getting schooled by Dietrich, Warwick details the beginnings of her friendship with Cardin, who made waves in the '60s by featuring women of color as both models and muses for his work at a time when few other designers dared do so. "I met him during my first time in Paris," recalls Warwick. "It was his birthday, and he requested that I sing 'Happy Birthday' to him. I went to his apartment, which was a magnificent loft, and there was a big party being held. He became like a godfather. And, of course, it goes without saying, his designs were absolutely divine. One of my album covers [1964's Make Way for Dionne Warwick] happens to be the first gown of his that I bought."

Warwick would go on to forge friendships with some of the biggest fashion designers in the world, including Oscar de la Renta, Valentino, and Yves Saint Laurent, but throughout her storied career she has taken great pleasure in always styling herself. (Even some of the most outré '80s looks from her time as a host and performer on Solid Gold were pulled directly from her own closet.) Looking her best and giving her fans what they want is still something that Warwick, 79, takes very seriously. "I feel compelled to be presented in a way that people expect me to be," says the star, who, prior to the pandemic, was still touring regularly. "They followed me throughout my career. They've watched what I wear and how I wear it. It's important to honor that."

For someone of such renown, Warwick maintains a remarkably unfussy beauty regimen. "It's very easy," she says. "I grew up just using Ivory soap, so basic cleanliness is truly the answer. I learned that a long time ago. Sleeping in makeup and wearing it all the time when it's not necessary is no good. I let my skin breathe. I am bare-faced most of the time, at least until I have to make appearances on TV or do my shows. But immediately after all that, once I get back to my abode, it all comes off."

> "Marlene Dietrich threw out all of my clothes!"

Having survived nearly six decades in the entertainment business—and all the attendant pressures that female artists of color had to weather in order to succeed—Warwick is generous in celebrating those who paved the way for her. "I am standing on the shoulders of some of the most iconic people who have ever graced our industry," she says, citing Lena Horne, Ella Fitzgerald, Sarah Vaughan, Frank Sinatra, and Sammy Davis Jr. as mentors. As someone who has outlived some of her peers and mourned the loss of many close to her, including her sister, Dee Dee, and cousin Whitney Houston, Warwick is happiest when working and performing. Though she will occasionally side-eye "children in the industry" who make outrageous demands that my parents are getting it. And it's a very beautiful place to be. At first, I didn't know if they were just tolerating me or if they were able to be proud of me as a person. But the other day my dad texted me a screenshot of "U Should," a song I wrote about a woman and self-pleasure. And now they both are able to say congratulations and listen to my songs in the house.

You have also been vocal about supporting Black Lives Matter, queer folks, and women. That is important but takes a lot of energy. What do you do to rest?

The best thing I have learned to do now is to take a step back and also just exist. I think that Black people are never allowed to just be. White privilege is the privilege to be, period. If we wanted to sum it up in one way, it is the privilege to exist.

That reminds me of a question that activist EbonyJanice likes to pose: "What would Black women look like if they created their lives from dreaming and not from suffering or resistance?"

I think that focusing on the problems that we didn't create is still being enslaved. But freedom to me is simply being able to exist in your own form. You can do that while fighting for it as well. Black women, Black men, Black nonbinary people—we take on the trauma, the robes, the battle scars of our ancestors and also the people we lost last week or 30 minutes ago. We take that on without fully being able to explore ourselves.

Is it daunting that every major celebrity claims you as their "kid"? [Welsh singer] Duffy was a big supporter, Snoop Dogg was crashing your Instagram Live, and you recently thanked Lena Waithe for helping you work through some big stuff.

I attract kindred spirits. I may not get everything right, but I always have the best intentions. There was no reason for Duffy to even know who I was. First of all, she paid for my first studio session ever. She paid for my first single. But that's a smaller thing in comparison to what she did for me spiritually and mentally. She's the one who introduced me to numerology and signs and things like that. Lena literally hooked me up with a psychiatrist and was like, "Hey, we're going to make sure you're OK. Whatever you need to get taken care of is what we're going to give you." I've been fighting impostor syndrome since being invited to [Jay-Z's pre-Grammys] Roc Nation brunch [in 2019]. I know what it's like to feel like none of your reality is what it is. But I think that when you get these heavy moments where someone is given the opportunity to show you who they are as a person, it takes away that shroud of inaccessibility.

What are you learning to love about yourself right now?

I've accepted parts of me that I've been told not to, parts of me that society called "wrong" or "ugly" or "bad" in some way. I've taught myself to be like, "I don't give a fuck." And I don't. That's not an act. Maybe at first it was a "fake it till you make it" mentality, but it's not now. I don't care how you feel about me, especially externally. I like myself, because if I didn't, my experiences would be different. My view on a lot of things would be different. I like my body. I don't get no complaints. [laughs] ■ been working in fashion since he was 15, first as an intern at the Opéra de Marseille. "The way they made costumes was very close to haute couture, so I learned how to pattern and drape and build," he says. He was young to start training—most French kids don't get hands-on internships until their early 20s—but his parents trusted him. "I was a dreamy kid and very attracted to music, painting, everything. I'm happy I came from the generation that was raised without any technology. Being able to be bored is what shaped our creativity."

The Marseillais are sunny and laid-back and often the first to poke holes in pretensions, especially uptight Parisian ones. Sialelli grew up in one of the city's most famous social experiments, La Cité Radieuse, a housing project dreamed up by the avant-garde modern architect Le Corbusier. The building alone is a brutalist masterpiece; it also provided free schooling, art, sports, and calligraphy classes under one roof. So Sialelli was nourished his whole young life without ever really having to leave his home.

After the Opéra, at 17, Sialelli secured a one-season internship at Christian Lacroix, keeping his eye on the prize: a spot at Studio Berçot, the prestigious fashion school in Paris. He felt out of place in the city, but it had to be Berçot because that was where much of the crew working for Nicolas Ghesquière at Balenciaga in its early-aughts heyday had studied and he wanted to be in that pipeline. "It was about innovation and the future," he recalls of the label. After he graduated, he did indeed end up at Balenciaga. "Nicolas was a great teacher, and there were some other strong creatives," Sialelli says of Ghesquière and workmates like Natacha Ramsay-Levi, now designing Chloé, and Julien Dossena, artistic director at Paco Rabanne.

Following Ghesquière's replacement by Alexander Wang, Sialelli got snapped up by Acne Studios, the progressive Swedish denim company, for a senior designer post where he was primarily responsible for womenswear, reporting directly to the creative director, Jonny Johansson. But he was also encouraged to think outside the box for the menswear and accessories lines. "It was exciting," Sialelli says, but Sweden, with its seasonal extremes and Scandinavian reserve, was not a great fit. Sialelli returned to Paris to work for Dossena at Paco Rabanne for a stint before joining Jonathan Anderson at Loewe.

Sialelli loved Anderson's approach to gender fluidity, which he adopted at Lanvin. It's a gesture in the spirit of Jeanne herself. It's also one that could survive the all-loungewear-all-the-time turn that fashion has taken in light of recent events. We are not likely to see yoga pants on the Lanvin runway anytime soon, but fashion taboo is not part of Sialelli's vocabulary. "I push everyone around me to express themselves," he says. Bien sûr.■ and "can't do more than six songs or an hour onstage," she is also quick to point out a new generation of artists who are blazing a path similar to hers. One in particular.

"I met Beyoncé when she was 16 years old," she says when the topic of the pop icon's visual album Black Is King comes up. "Her accomplishments are phenomenal. I love that she is now looking with grown-up eyes and feels obliged to extend herself to youngsters. I think it's magnificent what she and Jay-Z have begun to create."

For a workaholic like Warwick, seeing the entire entertainment industry grind to a halt due to the global pandemic has been jarring. With her ongoing show at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas currently on hiatus, Warwick, a longtime AIDS activist and human-rights advocate, is getting a well-deserved break. "I've never taken a time period like this for myself," she admits of quarantine, though she hasn't been totally idle. She is continuing to learn Portuguese, which will be essential when she one day realizes her long-term goal of retiring to Brazil. ("I find singing in the language very easy to do," she says. "But I still have to sit with my friends to find out, 'OK, what am I saying?' ")

As for the current political tumult in America, Warwick feels that, sadly, it was inevitable. "I think what it has really done more than anything else is given us all time to reflect and look inside ourselves for a minute," she says. "It's opening up a lot of areas we've ignored for too many years. It's a lesson we're all learning." Overall, though, she is optimistic about what happens next, adding, "Once we get over this, I'll just get back to doing what I do best."

Why I Love

MY YELLOW LINED WRITING PAD by GLORIA STEINEM

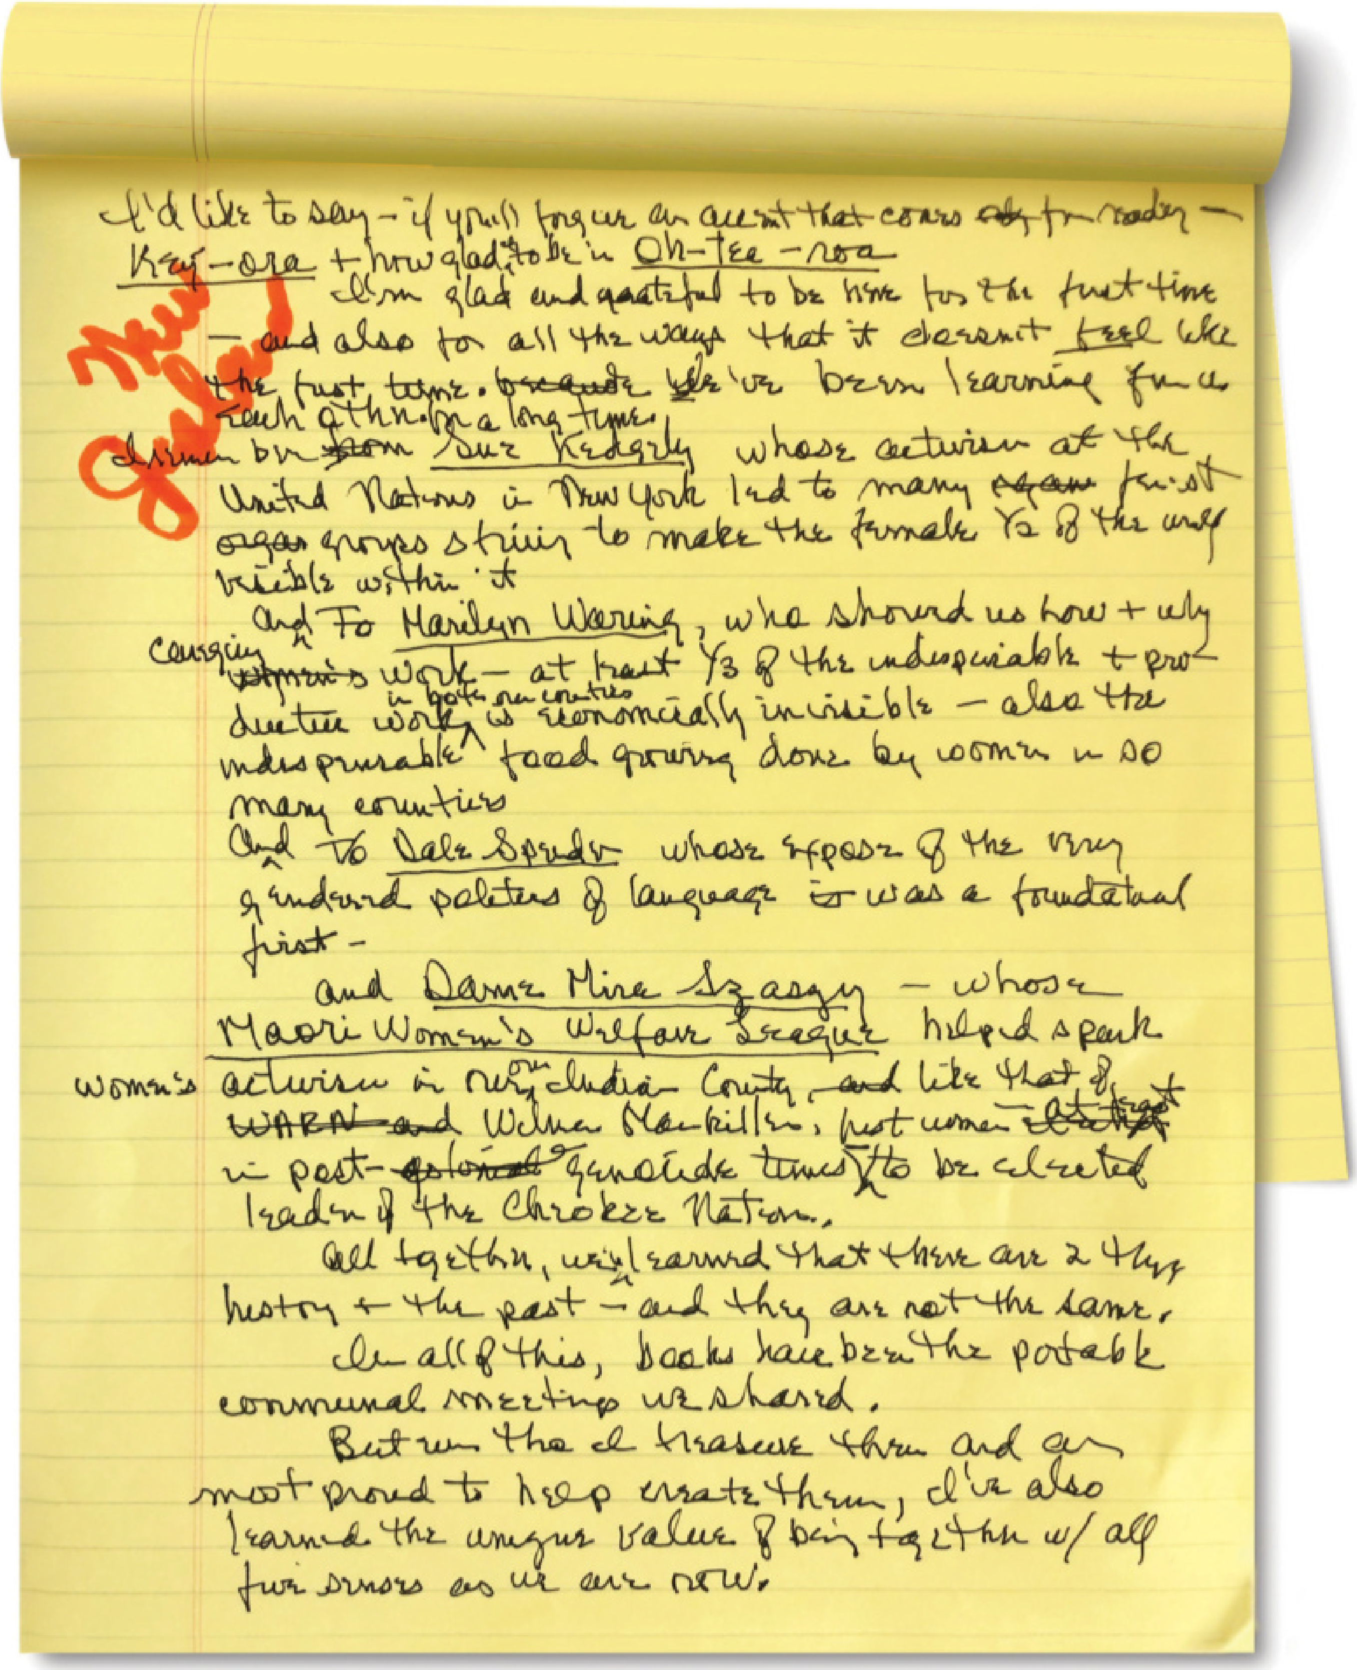
On Good Night America in 1974.



New Zealand

I'd like to say – if you'll forgive an accent that comes ~~[illegible]~~ from reading –
Key-ora + how glad to be in Oh-Tee-roa
I'm glad and grateful to be here for the first time – and also for all the ways that it doesn't feel like the first time. ~~because~~ We've been learning from each other for a long time.
I learned from ~~from~~ Sue Kedgley whose activism at the United Nations in New York led to many ~~organ~~ feminist organ groups striving to make the female 1/2 of the world visible within it
And to Marilyn Waring, who showed us how + why caregiving ~~women's~~ work – at least 1/3 of the indispensable + productive work in both our countries is economically invisible – also the indispensable food growing done by women in so many countries
And to Dale Spender whose exposé of the very gendered politics of language ~~is~~ was a foundational first – and Dame Mira Szaszy – whose Maori Women's Welfare League helped spark women's activism in ~~[illegible]~~ on Indian Country ~~and like that of~~ ~~WARN and~~ Wilma Mankiller, first woman ~~elected~~ in post-~~colonial~~ genocide times to be elected leader of the Cherokee Nation.
All together, we've learned that there are 2 things history + the past – and they are not the same.
In all of this, books have been the portable communal meetings we shared.
But even though I treasure them and am most proud to help create them, I've also learned the unique value of being together w/ all five senses as we are now.

Steinem's notes for a speech she gave in New Zealand in 2018.

I know it's a little odd that a writing pad is my favorite thing, but it's the truth. For me, writing on paper is the most intimate form of expression. Perhaps it's generational, because I didn't grow up with computers. But more than that, it's visceral. The poet Alice Walker once wrote that her words traveled down her arm, and I feel that exact same way. Whenever I start a piece, especially one that's personal, I do it by hand, so there are always many writing pads lying around by my bedside, on my table, in my luggage. I've been using the exact same yellow lined ones since the start of my career at New York Magazine in 1968. Then, when I was at Ms. Magazine, I used them to jot down story ideas and notes from our editorial meetings. Practically everything I've ever written has started on a notepad like this, from my first published essays in the '60s to my speeches about the Women's Movement to the new book I'm writing with two friends today about Black feminists. The yellow pads are great because they're longer than a normal page and you have more room to look at your work in one place. I also love that they're impermanent. The idea of a leather-bound notebook is too scary. You can't rip out a page easily enough! My favorite place to write has always been the desk in my New York City apartment, but right now I'm sheltering in a cottage in California, so I can walk around and write in the sunshine a little bit. How much I write a day always depends on the amount of terror and guilt I feel about a deadline. But lately I've just been working on my book and jotting down quotes or anything funny that I think of. The other day I wrote: "I am at an age where remembering something right away is as good as an orgasm." [laughs] More than anything, my notepad reminds me that there is still so much that I want to do and write. I'm conscious that there may not be too many notepads left for me, so I'm going to do my best to make the most of all of them.

The Glorias, a film based on Steinem's life, will be released September 30 on Prime Video.
